South China Morning Post

Singapore Opinion/Letters

Letters

Like Hong Kong, Singapore proves itself a vital ‘superconnector’ economy

Readers discuss the critical role of superconnectors in a fragmented global economy, China’s ability to thrive in the face of adversity, and US sanctions on Cuba

Letters

Published: 11:30am, 10 Jun 2026

As the global economy becomes more fragmented, predictability is becoming an increasingly valuable asset. This is where “superconnectors” are uniquely positioned to create value. Beyond connecting trade and investment flows, superconnector economies provide a predictable environment for businesses to operate across borders with confidence.

For decades, Hong Kong has played this role, serving as a bridge between mainland China and international capital, legal systems and trade.

click here to read the full article