IN THE SPOTLIGHT

Reimagining Regional Resilience in an Age of Great Power Rivalry (Discussion Panel) with Li Ka Shing Professor in Political Science at LKYSPP Khong Yuen Foong, Director of the Centre on Asia and Globalisation and Associate Professor of Political Science at LKYSPP Chin-Hao Huang, Associate Professor at NUS Law School Tan Hsien-Li, and Vice Dean (Research) and Dean's Chair Associate Professor at LKYSPP Selina Ho (L-R).

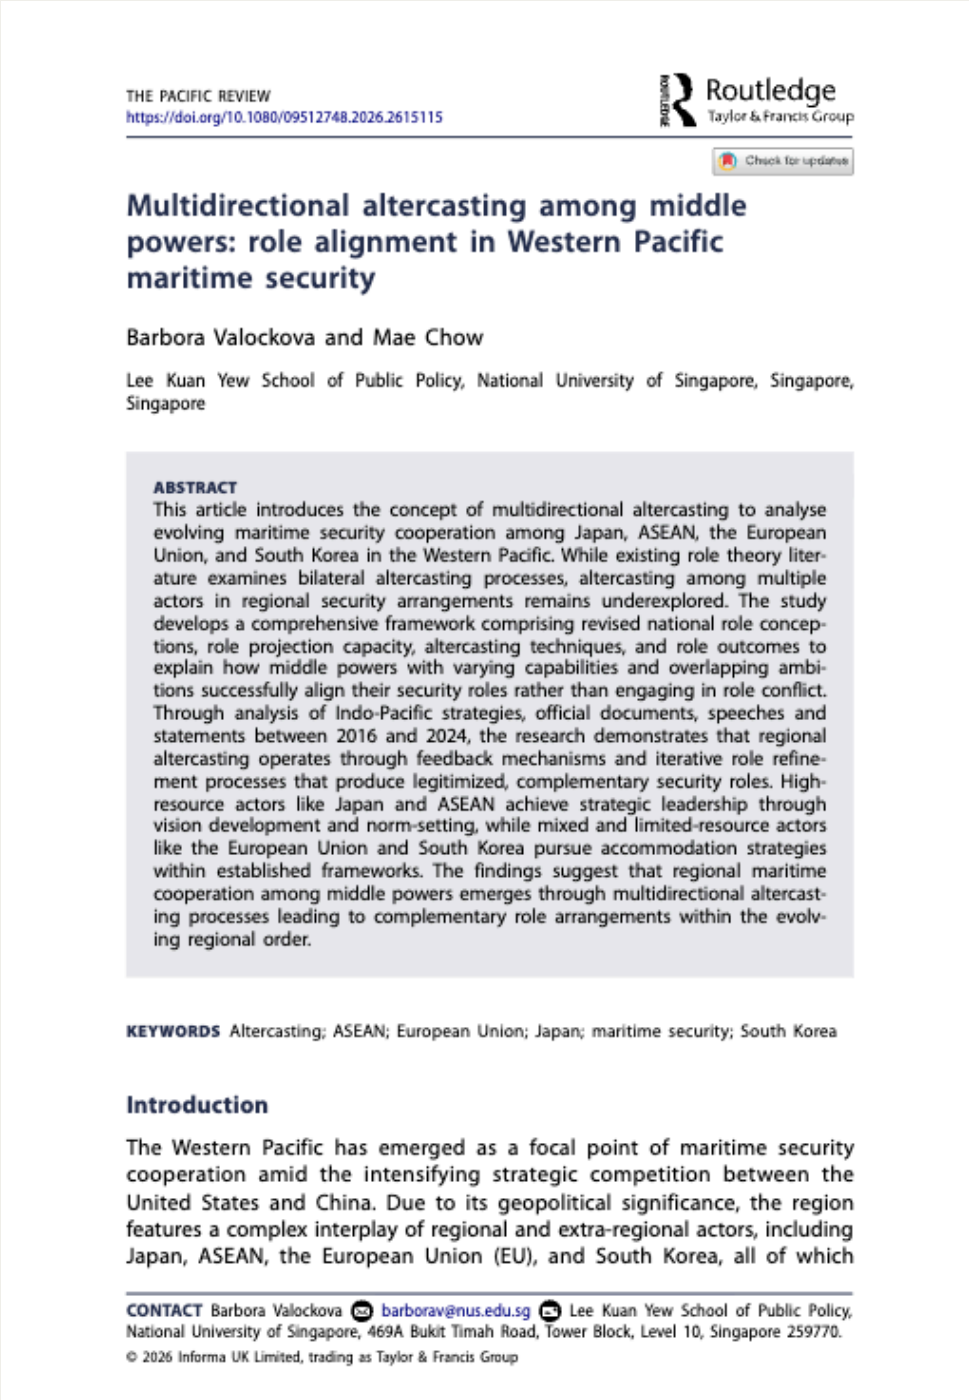

We are pleased to announce that our team has been awarded the Special Programmatic Grant by the Social Science Research Council to advance a major research initiative on Regional Resilience in Southeast Asia.

Building on the increased focus on regional resilience as highlighted by the region's leaders, the project aims to redefine what regional resilience entails in a changing world characterised by transboundary threats and challenges. Led by Khong Yuen Foong at the National University of Singapore, and in collaboration with partners from Nanyang Technological University and Singapore Management University, the five-year long project brings together a multidisciplinary team of scholars to examine the key regional challenges facing the region based on six important challenges of geopolitics, global value chains, norms and institutions, technology, health and demography, and analyse the ways in which such regional resilience can be developed.

Learn more about the project on our website, and we look forward to sharing further updates as the project progresses.

ANNOUNCEMENTS & UPCOMING EVENTS

Can Small States and Middle Powers Shape the Indo-Pacific? 14 April

The evolving geopolitical dynamics of the Indo-Pacific have lent renewed urgency to this long-standing yet unresolved debate: do small and middle states possess meaningful agency in shaping regional order, or are they ultimately constrained by structural pressures imposed by great power competition?

For an engaging discussion on this topic, join us for the inaugural Counterpoint Indo-Pacific panel discussion on 14 April, which asks, “Can Small States and Middle Powers Shape the Indo-Pacific?”. Three experts from the region will offer distinct perspectives on the scope, limits and implications of small and middle power agency in an era of intensifying great power rivalry.

Southeast Asia's Economic Security in a Changing World Order 28 April

Is Southeast Asia's openness-led economic model still fit for purpose in an era of geoeconomic fragmentation and economic securitisation?

Join our in-person panel discussion for insights from Prof Khong Yuen Foong (Co-Director of the Centre on Asia and Globalisation and Li Ka Shing Professor in Political Science at Lee Kuan Yew School of Public Policy), Prof Mely Caballero Anthony (Head of Centre for Non-Traditional Security Studies and Professor of International Relations at the RSIS | S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies), and Dr Barbora Valockova (Research Fellow, Centre on Asia and Globalisation). Dr Denis Hew, Senior Research Fellow at the Centre on Asia and Globalisation, will moderate the event.
