PUBLIC POLICY AND PRIVATE SECTOR DEVELOPMENT

EXECUTIVE EDUCATION

► INTRODUCTION ◀

It is widely recognised that the performance of the private sector is key to a country's development, and that government policies and programmes can stimulate or inhibit such performance. Long underappreciated, however, has been the role of the individuals who design and implement the government initiatives that impact its critical sector. These local professionals – from all sectors – must not only have the technical knowledge and analytical skills in their respective domains, but they must also have the agility to operate in complex state-market environments.

The Lee Kuan Yew School of Public Policy at the National University of Singapore is partnering the Leadership Academy for Development (LAD) – an initiative of Johns Hopkins University's School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS) and Stanford University – to offer an executive programme on "Public Policy and Private Sector Development" for government officials and private sector executives in Asia.

▶ PROGRAMME OBJECTIVES ◀

Policies to develop a country's private sector must be anchored in a solid understanding of context-specific economic, financial, political, and cultural realities. Policymakers must know how to set priorities, sequence actions, manage conflict, and build coalitions.

The programme seeks to equip government officials and future business leaders with the insights and skills and analytic frameworks to enable them to serve as catalysts for policy reforms in complex, sometimes contentious settings.

▶ TARGET AUDIENCE ◀

The Programme is designed for mid-level government practitioners and private sector executives with 5–10 years of working experience; members of the next generation of leaders from Asia.

▶ CASE-BASED CURRICULUM ◀

A few key lectures provide the conceptual framework for a largely case-based curriculum. This programme draws materials from LAD's own library of specially-written case studies to generate a more interactive learning experience for students. Each case describes how decision makers addressed obstacles or managed the political, cultural, or social impediments to a policy or its implementation.

Recognising that every country offers a unique context, there are no "best practices" or "right answers" – students are encouraged to draw from their own experiences to enrich classroom discussions and stimulate debate as they weigh real life trade-offs whilst juggling the changing dynamics of their home country.

Some of the topics LAD's cases studies have addressed are: the privatisation of public resources, the outsourcing of regulatory functions to combat corruption and improve efficiency, managing the demands of international finance institutions and multilateral banks, and the challenges of establishing a stock market and consumer credit information system.
